PLANTS FOR FLOWER BEDS, VERANDA BOXES, LAWN VASES, AND SIMILAR USES. THEIR PLANTING AND CARE

In preparing soil for a flower bed or veranda box, avoid any fertilizer except that which you know to be thoroughly rotted, or use some reliable commercial or chemical fertilizer. Many planting failures trace directly to the use of a green or not thoroughly rotted fertilizer. Too much strong fertilizer is worse than too little. Avoid watering plants when exposed in brilliant sunshine. Usually we prefer watering in the evening, as the plants have an opportunity to absorb the needed moisture before the heat of the following day evaporates it.

Each year we grow a large number of plants for flower beds, veranda boxes and similar uses. Below we list some of those which have proven best for the enjoyment of the home planter.

CANNA BULBS

We have handled a great many Cannas through the past years, and we take pleasure in recommending the assortment following. Each has its place, and each is hard to beat for that place.

In planting Cannas allow about 18 inches between bulbs, and do not plant over 2 or 3 inches deep. Do not plant until the ground is thoroughly warmed, as a bulb planted too early lays in cold, wet ground and decays instead of starting growth. Avoid overwatering until the bulb is well started, then water freely.

Place tall growing sorts at center or back of bed, and work to edge with lower growing sorts in order. Dusty Miller or other foliage plants make an effective border for Canna beds. Remove tops and store bulbs at once after first frost.

For special consideration we mention Firebird, the best red flowered, green leaved Canna yet introduced. The color is a brilliant glistening scarlet, the flowers large and beautiful and borne in profusion. Its petals will average about 2½ inches across, and are not marked with streaks or spots. GLADIOLUS BULBS

Gladiolus are one of the most satisfactory of all summer bulbs. They add greatly to the beauty of the garden, either when planted alone or among shrubbery and foliage. Planted at intervals of about two weeks until July, they will yield a succession of flowers until frost. Let the foliage remain through the summer to ripen the bulb; then, just before freezing weather dig the bulbs, cut off the tops, and store bulbs in a cool, dry place until the following spring. When wanted for cut flowers the spikes should be cut when two or three blooms at the bottom are fully open. Keep in cool deep water and the remaining buds will open in the vase. Kept in this way a single stalk will last for over a week. We list some of the more inexpensive sorts, which give splendid results in home growing:

HARDY HEDGE PLANTS

A number of the shrubs listed above make excellent hedge plants. Spireas Van Houttei and Reevesi, Cydonia Japonica and similar shrubs are quite effective. By far the most popular hedge plants are the Barberries and the Privets. We do not handle the California Privet, as this will not stand our winters satisfactorily. The Amoor River Privet is northern grown, and stands our winters much better. The Japanese Barberry grows a dense hedge, either trimmed or untrimmed. Colors with beautiful autumn colors, and carries red berries through the winter months. Both this and the Purple Barberry have thorny branches, and similar characteristics. The Purple is remarkable for its purple leaves and fruit, the berries remaining through the winter.
